Communication Journals

Disclaimer: These designations next to the journal titles are not absolute. They are merely a guide to help you determine what type of information is most likely to appear in any given title. It is YOUR responsibility to determine if a journal title fits the criteria of your assignment using the methods you are taught by Tiffini and/or your instructor. For more information to determine the difference between social science communication journals and rhetoric communication journals check out the slides on the course guide for communication tabs: COMM200. If you are in doubt, please do not hesitate to ask your professor or Tiffini (you must explain why you think an article is or isn’t SS/R in your email).

Primary Research Databases for Communication Studies

Communication Mass Media Complete. This database is the FIRST place to look for either Social Science or rhetoric topics since all of the journals listed in this document are indexed there. It is updated often, so you will get the timeliest and scholarly communication studies research here. ALWAYS search this database no matter if your topic is Rhetoric or Social Science.

PsycINFO. This database is the SECOND place to look for Social Science research. It has many disciplines in addition to communication studies. If you are researching a social science topic ALWAYS check this database in addition to CMMC. DO NOT USE THIS DATABASE FOR RHETORIC RESEARCH!!!!

Other Databases. CSULB has other databases and books to use for your literature review papers. Take a look at the ones that are listed on the Research Guide for Comm 200 and use those!
